Hi guys,

Toured out towards Hyalite Peak today and skied the open slope that is below Divide Peak, just across the creek from the summer trail.

Snowpack resembled everywhere else - weak facets under a 4F/4F+ slab and some soft new snow. In our pit, we got a CT20 and ECTN22 that broke on the basal facets but did not propagate (slab broke apart). We dug 2 more quick pits looking for a harder slab as we moved higher on the slope but the snow structure felt the same. Had one isolated whump on what was likely a wind loaded terrain feature, but otherwise no signs of instability. Stayed off the steepest parts of the slope and the skiing was excellent.
